The multi-pathological investigation of human remains is important in criminal, accident, and clinical contexts. Tissue is collected for DNA analysis or histological and histochemical examination by traditional methods. However, the destruction of some tissue samples can render the sample too small for analysis. Thus, a new method is required for the large-scale detection of tiny skin tissue samples. To solve this problem, we developed a new method for the forensic identification of skin tissue, using single nanoparticles (Ag and TiO₂). We chose to use Ag nanoparticles to extract nucleic acids and analyze it using the polymerase chain reaction, and used TiO₂ nanoparticles to induce the production of a black color reaction on the skin tissue. The products of the Ag and TiO₂ reactions were visible to the naked eye, and could be photographed. The extracted DNA and tissue samples were successfully identified by this method. This novel method is more convenient and fast than conventional methods.Q: RxJS odd behavior with async pipe and *ngFor I have a component where I use an async pipe to assign a value to an array of users: export class UserComponent { userList$: Observable>; userList$: Observable> = this.userService.getUsers().pipe(map(response => response.data), catchError(error => { // Returns an array of errors return Observable.of([]); })); constructor(private userService: UserService) { } ngOnInit(): void { this.userList$.subscribe(users
