included with..The present invention relates to methods and apparatus for identifying a calling telephone number and, more particularly, to methods and apparatus for prompting the caller to identify the calling number prior to disconnecting the line. Caller ID is an example of a service that has been developed for identifying the number of the caller that is attempting to place a telephone call. In many communication systems, the calling line number is displayed to the called party before the call is completed. Caller ID allows a calling party to see who is making a call to them so they can decide whether or not to accept the call. If the called party is interested in accepting the call, they typically answer the phone. Otherwise, the call is not answered or the line is otherwise disconnected. One problem that is encountered in caller ID is that the called party will often make arrangements to accept the call at times when they are not accessible by a telephone. For example, the called party may be driving a vehicle or conducting an important activity such as working at a business. In these situations, it would be desirable to be able to accept the call when the called party is not available.

Another problem that is encountered is that an incoming call may be inadvertently accepted by a called party who has a telephone in a location from which calls are typically blocked. In this situation, the called party may be unable to refuse an incoming call at a time when they are not available. In addition, the called party may be in a location from which calls are typically prohibited. For example, a doctor who is in surgery may have access to a number of telephone calls but be prohibited from accepting incoming calls. In this situation, it would be desirable to know the number of the incoming call so that the doctor can make a decision about whether or not to accept the call at a time when they are available.Solid
