Every day, FIFA 20 developers analyze the latest plays and the results of each play to improve the game. The same goes for FIFA 22. For FIFA 22, many elements will adapt and change the game like how players perform in real life. Their running speed is easier to predict. Their control in open space or in tight spots will reflect the fact that they may need to correct small movements for ball control. Dynamic momentum will also affect the shots of the goalkeeper and players shooting from distance. Moreover, all the players' animations, actions and reactions are captured and analyzed. New things like dribbling, acceleration and braking, new types of goals and behavior of the intelligent assistant Coach will affect the game and also how these elements will be captured and analyzed. How does "HyperMotion Technology" work? "HyperMotion" in FIFA 22 will work as follows: Every player in a match is equipped with a sensor to collect information about the player's movements. Every player is connected to a kind of data glove on their hand that will capture the data of each movement. The data is collected, processed, analyzed and transmitted to the server. The two main components: Movement Interface (MFI) and Movement System (MVS) in FIFA 22 are connected to capture the player's movement and then analyze the data to improve FIFA gameplay and make it closer to real life. This is what makes the "HyperMotion" technology different from other game engines that capture the data for several games and use it to drive many aspects of the game in FIFA. Every player running to a position on the field is collected using this data. Certain types of data may require more processing to detect them in real life than in the game engine. How many players are covered? All 23 most important players are captured. Every player that is not captured is simulated using the data of another player to create his behavior. Not all the data is captured. There are two reasons for this: Player collision that occurs in the game has a small impact in the real life. If this player collides with another one, he will undergo slight damage. Player movement is not relevant enough to capture when there is no contact to the player that plays the ball. Some players who shoot from distance or dribble will not be captured due to this.

Fifa 22 Features Key:

- Intuitive controls: FIFA now features customizable controls and multiple control schemes, allowing players to control the game in a way that's most comfortable for them.
- Enhanced Player Intelligence: How do players decide to attack, when to attack, and when to back off? FIFA 22 uses a new type of artificial intelligence called Individual Skill Ratings (ISRs), which enables teams to analyze individual player actions in a way that real-life players can, so that in-game players behave like the best example for a player to follow. This new AI is packed with knowledge about player playing styles and tendencies, team roles and strategies, positional skill ratings and player traits that aim to connect the player actions from the game to player attributes using a scoring model.
- Player behavioural changes: The team has taken this into account and adapted the game to offer players more intelligent decisions, allowing managers to know their players better than ever before. BattlEye and new AI techniques have also been included to offer new levels of gameplay options.
- True to life ball flight: FIFA 22 has been optimized to get full control of the ball, as it moves through the air in full-body simulations.
- Real-time Atmospheres: FIFA 22 offers a new set of sound effects and atmospheres, including pitch noise, crowd noise, pre-game rituals, extended set-piece options and myriad other implementation elements.
- HyperDrive: Fully reimagined ball physics enable players to dictate play. It is no longer a question of if you can dribble the ball, but when and how. Using the new "HyperDrive" system, your player is able to control everything including speed and control, their jump, and vision to slip into open spaces. Your dribble can be executed using 5 different sets of controls: Jump / Dribble / Control / Butt / Slide.
- Aerial game: AFC Bournemouth's Wes Wilson uses a chip before each aerial header to increase the likelihood of hitting it big time. Steer your player away from contact and the ball dives below you into the net.
- Significant update to the Pass and Shot Engine. In FIFA 20, goalkeeper distribution would determine a lot of the probabilities of successful passes and shots. Now, a goalkeeper's distribution and reactions will drive the probabilities of "wasted" passes and shots. For example, if a

Q: Push Login session data to navigation controller from MasterView Controller? The App has LoginView Controller whose delegate is implemented like this: @protocol LoginViewControllerDelegate - (void) loginControllerDidCompleteLogin:(NSString *)username token:(NSString *)token; @end @interface LoginViewController : UIViewController //... @property (nonatomic, assign) id delegate; //... @end The LoginViewController viewWillAppear method starts a sessionTask (this task may result in a network callback where the delegate method is called as mentioned in the comment) in background like so: BOOL loginSessionSuccess = NO; NSString *loginToken = [self handleEventForKey:@"loginSessionStatus"]; if ([loginToken isEqualToString:@"login"]) { // Network response starts processing... loginSessionSuccess = [self handleResultWithResponse:response]; } if (!loginSessionSuccess) { [self.navigationController popToRootViewControllerAnimated:NO]; UIAlertView *alert = [[UIAlertView alloc] initWithTitle:@"Error" message:@"Connection timed out" delegate:nil cancelButtonTitle:@"Ok" otherButtonTitles:nil]; [alert show]; } After successful login the session should be pushed into the MasterViewController (via the initial view of the application) like so
