The present study was designed to explore the role of FSH and LH in the regulation of ovarian function in immature rats and to determine whether ovarian steroids (progesterone and estrogen) or androgens (testosterone) play a specific role in the onset of puberty. The study consisted of 4 series of experiments, each of which included a control group. In series 1, ovariectomy at day 25 was performed and ovarian tissues and serum were removed at day 30. The number of oocytes recovered from the right ovaries was significantly lower than that recovered from the left ovaries in all groups (control, testosterone (0.1, 0.5 and 1 mg/100 g of body weight), and progesterone (2 mg/100 g of body weight)-treated groups). In contrast, the ovariectomized group (ovariectomized plus physiological saline injection) showed no oocyte depletion. In series 2, after ovariectomy at day 25, the ovaries were replaced with respective amounts of FSH or LH and oocytes were counted at day 30. The number of oocytes recovered from the FSH-treated group was significantly higher than that from the LH-treated group and from the control group. Serum FSH, LH and testosterone were measured at day 30. The ratios of serum FSH to LH were 0.06 (control), 0.12 (ovariectomized group) and 0.15 (FSH-treated group). Serum testosterone concentrations were lower in the ovariectomized group than in the control group. These results
